1. On 21 January 1950 the 478 and 482 Regiments of the Communist 1 Independent Division advanced against mountain bases in Chienning (116-50, 26-49) hsien and Taining (117-10, 26-52) hsien defended by guerrilla troops under LIAO Ch'ih-hsiang (). The guerrillas, having insufficient strength for a direct clash with the Communists, withdrew towards the Fukien-Kiangsi border by an indirect route through Mingchi (117-11, 26-19) hsien and Chiangle (117-26, 26-47) hsien, with the enemy in pursuit. After four days, the guerrillas ambushed the Communist unit and drove them off.
2. On 25 January the guerrillas reached Jen Tieh (), where they were attacked on 30 January by Communist troops, amounting to two regiments, from Taining hsien and Yangkou (117-42, 26-21). After an indecisive engagement, the guerrillas moved on northward to Lungchi (117-42, 24-32) hsien in early February. After 3 days and nights of continuous fighting, they arrived on 9 February at Kuangtse (117-23, 27-31) hsien. From there, after regrouping, they moved into the mountainous area of Tzuchi (117-09, 27-43) hsien and, in accordance with instructions from guerrilla headquarters, established a base there.
3. On 19 February, the guerrillas attacked Tzuchi and captured it the following day. The 6 Company of the 48 Regiment, 1 Independent Division of the Communist 48 Army² and the Tzuchi hsien Self-Protection Battalion surrendered to the guerrillas, but the Communist deputy magistrate of the hsien escaped. The guerrillas captured 3 light machine guns, 2 Thompson sub-machine guns, 14 pistols, 92 rifles, a large quantity of army supplies and all the archives of the hsien government. They released 57 prisoners from the hsien jail.
4. On 24 January, the Nationalist South Fukien District Changchou (117-42, 24-32) Operational Unit (irregulars, roughly equivalent to a regiment) attacked over 60 Communist troops in the vicinity of Changou (117-35, 24-06)³ hsien. In 2 hours of fighting, the guerrilla unit killed 17 Communists, wounded over 30, and captured 2 men, 19 rifles, 1 sub-machine gun, and 1 pistol.

5. Near Chaoan (117-12, 23-44)⁴ Hsien and Ichi (116-38, 23-44), guerrilla units disrupted telephone lines in Communist territory. In the same district, along the Han River (116- , 24-), guerrilla units on 26 January fired on a Communist steamboat and wounded nine persons.
6. On 7 February the 1 Company of the Nationalist Chaoan (116-37, 23-42) and Swatow (116-39, 23-22) Army East Independent Battalion sank a Communist motorboat and captured 2 tugboats and 7 Communist soldiers near Chaoan Hsien.
7. Between 9 January and the end of February irregular units of the Chaoan and Swatow Military Sub-District stationed on Nanao Isle (117-06, 23-22) were attacked 4 times by Communist troops. In each attack about 30 or 40 wooden boats were used, but all attempts to storm the island were repulsed. On 19 February, however, Communist troops in more than 120 wooden boats attacked with the support of the Communist Swatow Patrol Flotilla (汕頭巡防艦隊).⁵ Their principal ship was the 100-ton gunboat KUO KUANG (國光), a defected Nationalist vessel. By 23 February, Communist troops had landed on Anhsu (sic) (117-01, 23-28) and on Nanao Isle. On 28 February Nationalist guerrilla units on the island informed their headquarters by wire that they were still holding out in the eastern and western parts of Chen Pi Kuan (鎮辟關), the seat of Nanao Hsien government.⁶
8. On 11 February, more than 300 guerrillas from the Nationalist Chekiang-Fukien Border Area Column⁷ from a steamboat on Chientiaohsiao (121-37, 29-04) in Sanmen Hsien⁸ launched a commando raid. They fought a 4-day engagement against the Communist Sanmen Hsien Battalion and Sanmen Hsien Self-Protection Corps, totalling about 500 men. The guerrillas reached the city of Chientiao and inflicted more than 400 casualties before withdrawing without interference from the enemy.
